

If you want to give back to the community while gaining valuable professional experience and skills, the Washington Service Corps is for you.

The Washington Service Corps and AmeriCorps

Think of AmeriCorps as a domestic Peace Corps. It's a national network of hundreds of service programs that address crucial community needs in partnership with local nonprofit and government organizations throughout the United States.

The Washington Service Corps, administered by the state Employment Security Department, is one of the largest AmeriCorps programs in the country, supporting several hundred members. You can be part of the team.

Through the Washington Service Corps, you can:

- Tutor and mentor underprivileged youth.
- Provide nutritional education.
- Provide access to healthcare.
- Build affordable housing.
- Teach computer skills.
- Restore streams and habitat.
- Provide after-school programs.
- Teach environmental education.

Service requirements and commitment

AmeriCorps members make a commitment to serve a 10½-month term for 1,200 to 1,700 hours. AmeriCorps members must be at least 17 years old to serve.

Why join?

By making a commitment to serve, you can help transform communities, gain professional experience, learn about community service and social change, build leadership skills, and clarify your personal and professional goals.

What are the benefits?

- Experience to build your career.
- A monthly living allowance.
- An education award that can be used toward college costs and student loans.
- Student loan deferment.
- A big role in transforming communities.
- Medical benefits.
- Subsidized child care.
